GERMAN SAILOR TELLS SUPERIOR TO GO TO H—

The fourth German, however, one day, in the presence of the young American, launched forth a veritable flood of scathing remarks directed against the United States and President Wilson.

The American, keeled up to the highest pitch of indignation and disgust by the remarks, did not stop to argue. He jumped in and gave the German a terrific beating with his bare fists. When it was all over he packed up his belongings and left the house.

At this juncture the young American leaves the story. He had done his part, having led three of the Germans into his way of thinking as regards the reasons for America's entry into the war. The fourth German had also learned his lesson.

The story goes on to relate how the German who suffered the "beating up" for his vicious remarks came to realize soon after the weight which the arguments of the young American carried. He is said to have set silently to work among his German friends in Honolulu explaining to them that America's entry into the war was for humanity's sake, and that the Huns had failed to consider humanity in their mode of warfare.

His exhortations are said to have penetrated as far as the camp at Schofield where the Germans from the refugee ships are interned. He is said to have done his work largely among the men of the Geler, and that he succeeded in leading more than half the crew to his way of thinking.

It was the silent work of this German that brought about the remark made by the sailor to his superior officer.

The German sailor in question is said to have drawn a large cartoon showing Uncle Sam with one arm crooked about the neck of the Kaiser. Samuel's other arm was swung back and he was about to land a "hay-maker" on Wilhelm's jaw. Under the cartoon was the caption:

"So you thought I was bluffing, did you?"

Someone saw the cartoon and reported the matter to the captain. The captain rebuked the sailor, and the latter simply replied:

"You are not my captain now. We are both on the same level. I am an American, and you can go to—"
